General Counsel

STATOTHR

STATOTHR I interviewed [REDACTED] this morning as he was in town on other business. I explained there was no opening at the moment, but discussed with him his experience and intentions. He has been in practice about ten years, having been a junior partner in a Chicago firm for some time. This was general practice and excellent experience. He is now Assistant General Counsel to a construction company building whole towns. Again this is excellent legal experience. My impression is, therefore, that [REDACTED] is an intelligent, well-balanced lawyer with the type of experience needed for this office and should be carefully considered if an opening appears. He believes he should get the salary of a GS-13 which does not appear to be out of line with his experience and previous earnings.
